Summary:

Once again, a party was assembled in search of the Helmet of Temporal Lobe Control. With equipment assembled, and a plan in place for dealing with the wyverns using dynamite stuffed into roast chickens, they made their way to the area where they had been encountered previously.

Two wyverns jumped out at them, and nearly made work of some in the front rank. Gertrude was poisoned, but they were able to make it out of the room okay. With dynamite-laced chickens, the party managed to kill several wyverns. Smow lit flaming oil in a passage to buy time while they moved some treasure out.

The party ferried this treasure up to a safe room, and, leaving Gertrude there, returned to the dungeon. Came upon some goblins which were quickly dispatched. More dynamite cleared the remaining wyverns, and finally they were able to kill the remaining wyvern with goblin rifles.

Exploration was undertaken and many empty rooms and some silver were discovered. On the return home, at a listened-to door was heard the cuckoo-ing of several large booming voices. With much trepidation, the door was opened. In a huge triangular space, there gleamed blue-green the HELMET OF TEMPORAL LOBE CONTROL atop an elaborate pedestal. Behind this, illuminated by the helmet, advanced the feathered and beaked heads of a 7-headed hydra. The party shut the door and went home.

Gertrude remained heavily affected by the wyvern poison from which she had so quickly recovered last expedition. When she returned to Desire, she was stuck with a poison-induced illness which lasted for 18 weeks.
